

damaging, then how about asking the atheist child not to discuss religion with your child?

But if neither you nor the atheist child's parents have a problem with the children discussing religion, remember that it might be your child who makes the atheist doubt. Isn't that possibility worth allowing the discussion? Particularly since you know your position is stronger, right?

FEAR OF OTHERS

Of course, it's also possible that you don't want your child to associate with an atheist because atheists are so much unlike Christians and you just don't feel comfortable about exposing your child to someone so different. The word for that is "bigotry." Is that what you want to teach your children?

To download additional tracts or purchase a copy of Ask Yourself to Be Moral, please visit blog.iamanatheist.com

ARE ATHEIST CHILDREN DANGEROUS?

A Question of Moral Atheism

from blog.iamanatheist.com

©2009 D. Cancilla. Licensed under Creative Commons Attribution-Noncommercial-No Derivative Works 3.0 United States License

Wrong. Both Christian and atheist children likely have a lot to learn about the subject, and there's no reason they can't learn together.

For older children who already have a good grasp on telling right from wrong, you might do better to help your child not give in to peer pressure than to isolate your child from people with different beliefs. You can also speak to the atheist child's parents and make sure that the child knows what rules his Christian friend operates under.

FEAR OF DOUBT

What if the atheist child instills doubt about Christianity in your child? This is only a danger if you believe that your child is unable to handle questions about religion or won't come to you with questions that don't have an obvious answer. (Of course, it's also a problem if there are questions the atheist can ask that your religion doesn't have an answer to, but that's a different kind of problem.)

If you really think that your child's faith in God is so delicate that asking questions about it could be

If you're still worried, there's nothing wrong with closely supervised play dates until you are sure that there are no problems (probably a good idea with any new little friend, regardless of their religious belief).

FEAR OF TEMPTATION

Might an atheist child tempt your child to sin? It's possible. Might a Christian child tempt your child to sin? It's possible. Particularly when very young, children are still learning what is right and what is wrong.

You may worry that atheist children are immoral because they do not believe in God. But atheists have morals just like anyone else, and there are immoral atheists just as there are immoral Christians — you need to examine individuals, not groups, for morality. If you're still worried, there's nothing wrong with closely supervised play dates until you are sure that there are no problems (probably a good idea with any new little friend, regardless of their religious belief).

FEAR OF MISBEHAVIOR

Do you instruct your child never to see the atheist child again, even if the relationship had been going swimmingly up to that point. Why? There are several possible reasons.

If you're a Christian and discover that your child has a friend who is an atheist, what do you do? Do you instruct your child never to see the atheist child again, even if the relationship had been going swimmingly up to that point. Why? There are several possible reasons.

IF YOU'RE A Christian and discover that your child has a friend who is an atheist, what do you do? Do you instruct your child never to see the atheist child again, even if the relationship had been going swimmingly up to that point. Why? There are several possible reasons.

FEAR OF MISBEHAVIOR

You may worry that atheist children are immoral because they do not believe in God. But atheists have morals just like anyone else, and there are immoral atheists just as there are immoral Christians — you need to examine individuals, not groups, for morality.

If you're still worried, there's nothing wrong with closely supervised play dates until you are sure that there are no problems (probably a good idea with any new little friend, regardless of their religious belief).

FEAR OF TEMPTATION

Might an atheist child tempt your child to sin? It's possible. Might a Christian child tempt your child to sin? It's possible. Particularly when very young, children are still learning what is right and what is wrong. Both Christian and atheist children likely have a lot to learn about the subject, and there's no reason they can't learn together.

For older children who already have a good grasp on telling right from wrong, you might do better to help your child not give in to peer pressure than to isolate your child from people with different beliefs. You can also speak to the atheist child's parents and make sure that the child knows what rules his Christian friend operates under.

FEAR OF DOUBT

What if the atheist child instills doubt about Christianity in your child? This is only a danger if you believe that your child is unable to handle questions about religion or won't come to you with questions that don't have an obvious answer. (Of course, it's also a problem if there are questions the atheist can ask that your religion doesn't have an answer to, but that's a different kind of problem.)

If you really think that your child's faith in God is so delicate that asking questions about it could be

©2009 D. Cancelli. Licensed under Creative Commons Attribution-Noncommercial-No Derivative Works 3.0 United States License

To download additional tracts or purchase a copy of Ask Yourself to Be Moral, please visit blog.iamanatheist.com

from blog.iamanatheist.com

A Question of Moral Atheism

CHILDREN DANGEROUS? ARE ATHEIST

But if neither you nor the atheist child's parents have a problem with the children discussing religion, remember that it might be your child who makes the atheist doubt. Isn't that possibility worth allowing the discussion? Particularly since you know your position is stronger, right?

FEAR OF OTHERS

Of course, it's also possible that you don't want your child to associate with an atheist because atheists are so much unlike Christians and you just don't feel comfortable about exposing your child to someone so different. The word for that is "bigotry." Is that what you want to teach your children?

damaging, then how about asking the atheist child not to discuss religion with your child?

QUESTIONS OF MORAL ATHEISM: INSTRUCTIONS

We appreciate your interest in helping us spread information about moral atheism! To make copies of this pamphlet for your own use or to share with friends, follow these simple steps:

1. Print pages one and two of this document, one on each side of the same piece of paper (if you don't have access to a duplex printer, print page one, put the page back in the paper tray upside down, and print page two — depending on the type of printer, you may have to experiment a bit).
2. Cut the printout in two, using the thin rules across the middle of the page as a guide.
3. Fold the two pieces of paper in half, making a pair of small pamphlets.
4. Keep one of the pamphlets to read, and give the other away to an interested friend or stranger.

That's it! If you have any questions, suggestions, or comments, we invite you to share them by leaving a comment on blog.iamanatheist.org. Thanks!
